CHINAMEN IN THE NAVY

The following letter on the above subject appears in the Times :--

Sir, -About the year 1863 I had the honour to command one of Her Majesty's ships on the coast of China. At that time we always had Chinamen for officers, servants, stokers, &c. In my opinion the best plan in regard to employing Chinamen in men-of-war lies between two extremes, the first that of having no Chinamen, and the second having too many. In very hot climates the use of native stokers

s desirable, if not absolutely necessary, on account of the extreme heat in the stokehole; but too much of the native element is to be deprocated, particularly in small vessels, where they are generally short-banded; and Chinamet are I can well remember when I was a young lientenant in command of a guabout. 'We were having rather a warm engagement with some pirate junks, and as more than half of our Europoan crew were sick, we made John Chinaman (as he is called) clap on to help run the guns out: but as soon as the pirate junks opened fire down went John Chinaman on his face on the deck, and although I tried to persuade them to got up, and even went so far as to prod them slightly with the point of my sword, yet these fine fellows would do nothing, but lie on their faces and howl until the firing was over. I tell this little yarn to show that it would never do to have too many Chinamen on board a man-ofwar in time of action, although I do not wish to imply that all Chinamon are cowards. I do not think English seamen like having foreign petty officers on board ship. . I can recollect the ill-feeling aroused in one ship I was in because a boatswain's mate (who was a "darkie" was ordered to flay one of our blue-jackets, who was a white man .- I remain, Sir, your obedient E. M. DAYRELL, Captain R.N.

The Neue Freie Presse learns from St. Potersburg that the plan formed during the recent visit of the Czar to Copenhagen of founding a Russo-Danish Merchant Shipping Company, is on the point of being realised. The capital will be seven million roubles, and the fleet of thirty or forty iron and steel vessels, to be built at Copenhagen, will be so constructed as to be available for the transport of troops, and will also be easily convertible into war-ships.

Following the example of Mr. Joseph Zuchnsdorf, who lately bound two Elzevir editions in human skin, another London binder has recently executed an order to encase a copy of Holbein's "Day 2 Death" in the same material—assuredly a most appropriate covering for this work. These are the most recent instances of the use of human skin for such a purpose; but they are far from unique, several criminals in olden days having been, after execution, despoiled of their integument in order that the bookshelves of some connoisseur of bindings might be enriched by the ghastly relic.

An electrical steering apparatus, the invention of Mr. Washburn, was tested recently on the United States steamer Tallapoosa, in New York harbour. The invention is an electro-pneumatic steering apparatus by which a ship steers her own course automatically. The tiller is worked by compressed air, governed by electricity. The automatic principle is obtained by the introduc-tion of an electrical mechanism into the binuscle, which, being attached to the compass at the point to which it is desired to shape the vessel's course, will hold the ship to that point, the motion of the vessel opening and shutting the circuits of the mechanism, which acts upon the radder and corrects any deviation from the mark-

Dr. Evans relates, in the Bristol Medical Chirurgical Journal, the history of a girl who attempted suicide on May 2, by jumping from the Clifton Suspension Bridger. The bridge is 250 feet high, and has been a favourite place for saicides. Sixteen persons have been known to have succeeded in self-destruction by making this same leap. One other only was picked up alive, but arrevived only thirty minutes. Twenty days after the fall the putient was considered convalescent and able to walk without pain. "Curious how one's feelings get blunted by the sight of blood and horrors," says Sir Charles Wilson, in his new narrative of the Nile expedition. "There was one strange incident. An unwounded Arab, armed with a spear, jumped up and charged an officer. The officer grasped the spear with his left hand, and with his right ran his sword through the Arab's body; and there, for a few seconds, they stood, the officer being unable to withdraw his sword until a man ran up and shot the Arab. It was a living embodiment of one of the old gladiatorial frescoes at Pompeii. It did not, strange to say, seem horrible; rather, after what had passed, an every day occurrence. I used to wonder before how the Romans could look on at the gladiatorial fights; I do so no longer."
